

Sokratis Grigoriadis B.Sc. (First Class of Honours), M.Sc., Ph.D(c)

Reproductive Biologist, Clinical Embryologist

PhD Candidate, Department of Physiology

Medical School of Athens, National and Kapodistrian University of Athens

Sokratis Grigoriadis is a graduate of the Department of Biology at the University of Patras where he obtained his academic degree with First Class of Honours. He completed his Master's Degree in "Research in Reproduction " in the Second Obstetrics-Gynecology Clinic at the National and Kapodistrian University of Athens. Since November 2019, he is a PhD candidate in the Department of Physiology at the Medical School of Athens, and a member of the Research Group of Clinical Embryology and Physiology of Reproduction". Mr. Grigoriadis conducted his undergraduate thesis in the field of Developmental and Molecular Biology at the Laboratory of General Biology, School of Medicine of the University of Patras. During this period, he was a trainee laboratory geneticist in the Laboratory of Genetics, in the Pediatric Clinic of University Hospital of Patras. In his Master Thesis, he investigated the impact of maternal age on In Vitro Fertilization outcome. His research interests focus on Infertility, Assisted Reproduction and Embryology. He has contributed as an author to more than 32 publications in international peer-reviewed journals and has participated in numerous conferences in Greece and abroad. He serves as an Invited Reviewer for several international journals. Mr. Grigoriadis is associate member of the Health Committee of the Panhellenic Association of Life Scientists and member of ESHRE.